

(arrrrrr!) CHAOS

If it had happened during one of Archaos' anarchic shows people would have probably thought it part of the madness and mayhem going on around them. But, unfortunately for the travelling French circus, it happened the day before they were due to begin their two-week stint in Dublin as part of the currently running theatre festival. An evening of ferocious winds that saw innumerable dogs and cats flying helplessly through the air (with the occasional granny, clinging diligently to the lead, close behind!) proved too much for the specially constructed marquee, erected only earlier that same day.

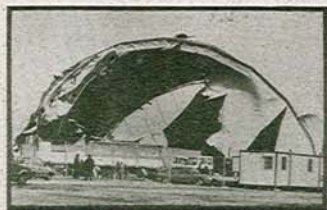

Archaos: at a marquee near you

Our man on the spot, JODY CAMPBELL, managed to nail his boots to the ground long enough to get these blow by blow pics of the whole tragic affair.

In fine ol' theatre tradition, the show must go on and Archaos can be currently seen, chainsaws, guillotines and manic grins all present and correct, at The Square, Tallaght in a newly acquired marquee until Sunday 21st October.

The wind will puff...

and it will blow your marquee down!

Ain't nothin' goin' on in this tent!
